

Female Force: Stacey Abrams, the Trailblazing Politician Who's Inspired a Generation

Stacey Abrams is a trailblazing politician who has made history as the first African American woman to be nominated for Governor of Georgia. She's also a voting rights activist and the founder of Fair Fight, an organization dedicated to ensuring that every American has the right to vote.

Abrams was born in Madison, Mississippi, in 1973. She grew up in a working-class family and was the first person in her family to attend college. She graduated from Spelman College with a degree in political science and went on to earn a law degree from Yale Law School.

After law school, Abrams returned to Georgia and worked as a lawyer and voting rights activist. In 2006, she was elected to the Georgia House of Representatives, where she served for six years. In 2018, she ran for Governor of Georgia, but lost to Republican Brian Kemp by a narrow margin.
